Open Science: Concepts, Publishing Practices and Knowledge Production

A workshop jointly organized by Open Access Office Berlin (Free University Berlin), The Doctoral School of Literature, Humanities, and Social Sciences, Lebanese University, Humboldt Institute for Internet and Society Berlin, and Orient-Institute Beirut.

20 and 21 March 2023

at Orient-Institute Beirut

(Rue Hussein Beyhum 44, Zokak el-Blat, Beirut)

Dear colleagues and friends

We cordially invite you to participate in our two days-workshop that has been designed to provide a collaborative forum to share ways of opening-up our research and publishing practice. In three sessions we wish to explore what Open Science is and what it can become in our respective working fields and research practice. We will address modes of collaboration on openness in academic knowledge production as well as questions related to technical infrastructure and appropriate strategies of publishing texts or research data open access. In addition, we are planning to evaluate directions of possible future cooperations between the workshop's participants.

You don't need to bring any previous knowledge. We will learn together the basics and practical ways of implementing Open Science in your own work.
